IT WON'T MATTER

In the end it won't matter
When we get over there
Away from life's problems,
Vexations and cares.

No, it really won't matter
To those who have taken
The path with the Savior
As their eternal haven.

For those who choose Heaven
There is joy unsurpassed
For they get to meet Jesus
Face to face, at last!

The dark side exists
For those who choose hell
For terrors await them
That no man can tell.

We don't know the suffering
That they must endure
For eternities ages
Make up for life's lure.

For the world seems so wonderful
With all of its glam
And most cannot fathom
That it's all a sham.

They don't see that Jesus
Is the only way
If you're going to survive
The rat race today.

If you're going to survive it
And go on to rest
With Jesus, the Savior,
And be ever blest.

If you're going to survive it
And know true peace each day
You must choose and serve Him
No matter what others say.

Yes, there is an answer
An answer that's true
Choose Him and know Heaven
When life here is all through.

Then it truly won't matter
When you get over there!

Start The Year With Planning

As we begin a new year, consider how a little planning could help relieve stress and make best use of your resources. In an effort to eat more meals and snacks from home, set aside 30-60 minutes each week to do menu planning. There are many benefits to meal planning including serving more nutritious meals to your family, saving money on groceries, saving time and eliminating the stress of last-minute decision making by having a plan for your week in place. Once you have meal plans created, you can reuse them other times throughout the year.

Menu planning makes it easier to save money on food. You can build your menus around weekly specials and "in-season" produce. Consider using store brands instead of name brands. Buying in bulk can help on your food budget. However, you want to only purchase foods your family will eat. Throwing out food with not save you money. Some additional tips that might help save money include eating breakfast before you leave home or packing a to-go breakfast. Bring coffee from home and choose water instead of other beverages. Pack your lunch (with the leftovers from supper) to take to work.

By planning ahead and even making meals and freezing them for busy nights, you can limit purchases of processed foods.

Home-cooked meals are often healthier, since you can include more fruits and vegetables and control the sugar, fat and sodium content. To assist with meal planning, choose MyPlate for a healthy meal.

Time savings is another great benefit of menu planning. Some foods can be prepped during the weekend or the night before to eliminate a rush after work when you are trying to get a meal on the table. Think about cooking once and eating two or three times. For example, if you cook ground beef, you can make spaghetti one night and with the extra browned ground beef that you refrigerate, you can make chili. Or, you can serve the same food multiple ways to add variety to your menu. For example, when using carrots - have them fresh one meal, roast the carrots or serve in a soup at another meal and then cut them up in a salad for a third time of serving them. This helps utilize perishable foods before they spoil.

Let the entire family help with menu planning. You might ask each family member to create a list of 10 favorite meals for quick ideas that your family with enjoy. By allowing children to "invest" in meals, they gain skills that will last their entire lifetime. Children can
